What are some examples of simple sentences with a subject ...

Object Complements and Adverbs . Barbara Goldstein, Jack Waugh, and Karen Linsky Be careful not to confuse sentences that look alike. Consider these two sentences: He called the man a liar. He called the man yesterday. Man is the direct object in both sentences. In the first sentence, liar renames the man, so it is the object complement.In the second sentence, yesterday is an adverb that tells ...

Remember that once you have found the direct object, you have to ask who (or what) is receiving it to find the indirect object. Let's do another one: Show me the signature. Step 1. Find the verb = "show" Step 2. Ask "What?" = "the signature" (Therefore, the direct object is "the signature.") Step 3. Ask "Who (or what) will receive it?" = "me" (Therefore, the indirect object is "me.") The Indirect Object Is Often Preceded by "To" for "For."

Direct objects are the results of action. A subject does something, and the product is the object itself. For example, consider this sentence: "Marie wrote a poem." In this case, the noun "poem" follows the transitive verb "wrote" and completes the meaning of the sentence.; Indirect objects receive or respond to the outcome of an action. Consider this example: "Marie sent me an email."
